Water From Above: A New Theory Explaining How The Hanging Gardens Of Babylon Were Likely Watered! John Doering

Summary: I would like to present a new theory as to how one of the 7 wonders of the ancient world, the Hanging Gardens of Babylon, were likely watered. Up until now, a period of approximately 2,600 years, the mystery of how the immense magnitude of water was raised to such a height, from the Euphrates river below, has stumped the archaeological and scientific community. I would like to propose that the water was never raised from the river. Instead, when the clouds let forth their rain, the rain fell onto the very top of the city wall (the city wall was also one of the 7 wonders of the ancient world, due to its immense size) and then by the force of gravity was channeled into cisterns. The cisterns would likely have been at high altitude and built within or adjacent to the wall. The water could then be released, with the force of gravity, to water the Hanging Gardens whenever needed. The mathematical calculations show that approximately 531 tons of water could be provided using this method. It far surpasses the 300 ton requirement presented by the BBC TV documentary Secrets of the Ancients. So in effect, there was no need to ever raise a single drop of water from the Euphrates River. The whole system would work through the force of gravity:

Water From Above!

Note: The minimum estimate of 300 tons of water needed per day to water the Hanging Gardens of Babylon was an estimate given by the BBC TV documentary Secrets of the Ancients, and at the time of this writing can be viewed here: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=rLIHvZqSpaQ>. In this documentary it was proposed that the historical accounts of the Hanging Gardens of Babylon were incorrect, and that, it was simply too difficult to raise all of the needed water from the Euphrates River to water the garden. Instead it was proposed that the Hanging Gardens of Babylon were really in Nineveh ... The Hanging Gardens of Nineveh, where, the closer proximity to the mountains would allow the water to be brought in from the mountains via aerial aqueducts. National Geographic also covered the story.
