Dominique finds herself falling out of love with the only man that ever understood the pain of the loss of her parents. A loss that was even more painful because of the manner in which each was murdered. Never could she have imagined that the man she loved so passionately was the son of the woman who took her parents. In one night of pandemonium all sins are revealed; those of Dominique's lover's mother as well as those of her own mother. Walking away from it all would have been more difficult if it wasn't for a new love that promised to right all her past wrongs and put to rest all of her past hurts. Malik was everything she wanted and needed and she was the epitome of perfection in his eyes. There was nothing that could stop them from living happily ever after. Nothing except the crazy man that wouldn't let Dominique go and a secret that even Malik was not aware of until it was too late. It's not you versus me or your life versus my life. Our lives intercepted each other, collided, exploded, and left casualties. What else was I supposed to do Nique? What do I do now? Those were the words left in a note to Dominique the night after a man she used to love tried to kill the man she was falling in love with. She didn't know what he should do, but she knew she had to put all of this madness behind her. It was clear to her that the sins of their mothers had come to revisit them. Malik was her salvation. What no one counted on was the heartbreaking sin of Malik's mother saving them all.
