This story deals with the Holocaust, obsession with scholarly arcana, mental imbalance and the lives of outsiders. This book chronicles the life of Rose Meadows, who works as a nanny/secretary to the Mitwischer clan. Rudolf, heads this large family of refugees from Nazi Germany. Rudolf is a scholar of an obscure ancient Jewish sect, the Karaites. Rudolf needs access to the public library in Manhattan, so they move from upstate New York to the Bronx. Anneliese is the oldest of the four children and almost the same age as Rose, is in charge of the day-to-day functioning of the family because her mother, a renowned physicist, suffers from pronounced mental deterioration which was brought on by persecution in Germany. James A'Bair is the family's wealthy benefactor, and comes and goes on his own schedule. He is the subject of a popular series of children's books written by his father. James, sinister and strangely destructive, he is also known as the "Bear Boy,". He dominates the last half of the book.
