Penniless and out on the street, Hope Lee turns to the only place she can find work, the brothel. Trying to put her best foot forward, she convinces the Madame to give her a chance. With the contract signed, Hope finds herself the property of Madame M. But when the Doc comes by for her examination, she can't control her temper long enough and winds up over his knee, with the prospect of a job looking worse than it ever has before.

Clint and Madison have a feeling there's something different about the town they just rode into, they're just not quite sure what it is. They quickly find out what their hunch is about when the hotel is full and they're told to look for beds at the brothel. One glimpse of Hope and the men know she's to be their bride, all they have to do is convince her of it.

Realizing that she's got a gal with too much sass on her hands, Madame M is only too happy when the two rugged cowboys offer to take the fiery tempered new girl from her.

Soon Hope finds herself the object of not just the stern men's affections, but also their discipline as they begin to show her what it means to be a Red River bride.
